Clement Gillespie Wright.

CLEMENT GILLESPIE WRIGHT was born in Greensboro, North Carolina, December 14, 1864. After a preparatory course at Bingham School, he entered the Freshman class of the University in 1883. In the fall of 1885 he left the University and read law under Judges Dick and Dillard, and practised his profession with his uncle, Judge John A. Gilmer, until the death of the latter. Since that time he has been engaged in and connected with several business enterprises.

Probably no alumnus of the University has shown a keener interest in the general welfare of the University, and especially in the development of the athletic spirit of the institution.

Mr. Wright is a true North Carolinian, and has unbounded faith in the future of his State and Alma Mater.

Introduction.

THE ninth volume of THE HELLENIAN has at last appeared. It is impossible for casual readers to understand or appreciate the undertaking to which we have been assigned. However, in spite of our engrossing college duties, we have done our best, and the result of our labors is before you. If you find defects, be not surprised; if, perchance, anything worthy, applaud.

To Messrs. Bailey, Gwyn and others, we are especially indebted for their kindly interest in contributing many attractive drawings. Especially is it a great pleasure to acknowledge our indebtedness and deep gratitude to Col. J. S. Carr, without whose very substantial aid our book could scarcely have been published.

Hoping that this Ninety-eight Hellenian may fulfil its mission in adding yet another tie to our fraternal feeling, and prove a lasting tribute to the memory of Ninety-eight, we are,

Respectfully,

THE EDITORS.

THE most important event of the college year—certainly from a purely literary standpoint—is our annual debate with Georgia. This is an attempt each year to disprove the oft-repeated charge that oratory and debate are in their decadence.

There have been two contests. The first meeting was in Georgia last year. North Carolina's representatives, David B. Smith and Henry G. Connor, Jr., were overpowered by Georgia's superior eloquence and skill in rebuttal. But in another year there was to be another debate.

The debate for this year took place in Gerrard Hall, University of North Carolina, on March 4. Mr. Henry A. London presided. Judge Walter A. Montgomery, of the State Supreme Court, ex-Judge Henry G. Connor, of Wilson, ex-Congressman Fred A. Woodard, of Wilson, were the judges. Georgia was represented by W. F. Upshaw and J. S. Roberts; North Carolina, by Edward K. Graham and Willis J. Brogden. The question was, "Resolved that the United States annex Hawaii." North Carolina had the negative side. The debate was vigorously contested. North Carolina won by superior skill in debate, but to Georgia was yielded the palm for eloquence.

In the societies are the influences of these occasions felt, perhaps, to the greatest extent. After the joining of a society was made optional, the numbers had gradually decreased, with last year as a low water mark. This year, under this and other influences, the societies are again at the highest mark of numbers, of power, of efficiency. The debaters become marked men. The honor is worth striving for.

University Progress.

I AM asked to write of the progress of the University—the real progress.

And the only help offered by the editor is the hint that the progress of a university does not consist in gathering together material things.

In what, then, does the progress consist? And, having discovered the content of progress, what shall be our standard of measurement? I suppose it is possible to progress by going backwards.

Does the progress of a university consist in adding departments to the curriculum? No.

Does the progress of a university consist in raising the standard for entrance? For graduation? No, in both cases.

Progress does not consist in quantity. Quantity is mass. And mass is always static. Progress is surely nothing less than motion. Progress may reveal itself in the acquisition of material things, or it may not.

Shall we say that progress consists in the quality? A student in his first year does work that is graded seventy per cent.; in his Senior year, he does work graded ninety per cent.; has this student made progress? Not necessarily. Ninety is simply seventy plus twenty. Quality does not seem to differ from quantity other than in degree.

The progress of a University does not consist in adding another building, or raising another thousand dollars, or increasing the amount of work.

Progress is an event in the life of spirit. Progress is therefore a spiritual fact.

When a sinner becomes a Christian, we say that man has made progress.

When an animal becomes civilized, we say there is progress.

When government passes from the objective over into the hands of the people, we say there is progress.

When truth becomes man and man become universal, there is progress.

Man is truth and truth is universal; therefore man is universal.

Therefore the progress of a man is a movement in self-consciousness.

“Know thyself,” said Socrates.

The university exists in man. Therefore the progress of the university is in the life of the students. Has the life of the student made progress?

In some respects, there is clear progress.

There is here a desire for the truth.

A university is a home of the truth, or it is nothing. Our University is seeking the truth, it is therefore making progress.

DR. MANNING.

Hon. John Manning, LL. D.

PROFESSOR OF LAW IN THE UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA.

DR. JOHN MANNING was born on the 30th day of July, 1830, in the ancient capital of the colony of North Carolina, Edenton. His ancestors, about the beginning of the 18th century, settled the Manning Manor plantation, situated near Norfolk, in Virginia, about two miles from the Great Bridge, where Gov. Lord Dunmore was defeated by a force consisting largely of North Carolina troops. His grandfather removed to North Carolina, settling first in Currituck county, and then, as a merchant, in Edenton. Thus it is that Dr. Manning's father, of the same name, and his uncle, the late Chief Justice of Louisiana, Thomas C. Manning, were natives of this state.

John Manning, the elder, preferring a more adventurous life than that of a merchant, accepted an appointment in the navy procured for him by James Iredell, the younger, Governor and Federal Senator. He rose to the rank of captain, resigned his post at the beginning of the Civil War, and served the Confederacy until forced by bad health to retire into private life.

The mother of Dr. Manning, Tamar Leary, belonged to one of the oldest and best families of the Albemarle country. As her husband was frequently absent on long cruises, under her wise and loving care her children were chiefly reared.

Dr. Manning's earliest years were spent in Edenton. He was taught at a school of much local fame, the historic Edenton Academy, then under the charge of Mr. Charles Disbrow. Thence he was transferred to a still more famous institution, the Norfolk Military Academy, of which Prof. Hopkins, once of the United States Military Academy, was principal, and John V. Strange, a relation of Judge Robert Strange, of this state, was assistant. In his senior year he was appointed to the honorable position of Captaincy of Cadets. He left Norfolk in 1847 and entered the Sophomore Class in the University of North Carolina. Among his classmates were General George B. Anderson, Mr. Wm. H. Johnston of Tarboro, Professor W. C. Kerr and the late Judge Thomas Settle. He was one of the best debaters in the Philanthropic Society, and on account of his graceful delivery was chosen as one of the representative declaimers at the Commencement of 1848. Possessed of an uncommonly fine bass voice, he assisted in forming the first student choir known in our history, the leader being Dr. Richard H. Whitfield, of Meridian, Mississippi. He was a faithful student, graduating with high honor, and showing the bent of his mind by delivering an oration on "The Influence of Religion on Law."

After leaving the university, young Manning gladly availed himself of his father's offer to sail with him, as captain's clerk, along the Eastern coast of South America. The voyage was made in the U. S. brig Bainbridge, and he had the pleasure of visiting among others the great cities of Rio Janeiro, Montevideo and Buenos Ayres, and, as son of the captain, of having entrée into the highest social circles of South America. Orders being received for the Bainbridge to proceed to the coast of Africa, not liking a naval life, he resigned his position and returned home on the national vessel, St. Louis.

After consultation with his parents, he resolved to become a lawyer and settle in Norfolk, after studying his profession in the quiet village of Pittsboro, under a cousin of his, an eminent lawyer, John H. Haughton. He procured his County Court license in 1852 and Superior Court license in 1853, along with the late Judge Fowle, Kemp P. Battle, Edward Graham Haywood, and others, of whom all are dead except himself and Dr. Battle.

His cousin, Mr. Haughton, was so impressed with his industry and intellectual ability as to tender him a partnership in his large practice. Giving up his Norfolk plan, he accepted the offer, and as the senior partner soon afterwards concluded to change his residence to the county of Craven, the junior became the possessor of the extensive business of the firm. This was a most onerous burden for young shoulders, but he not only bore it successfully, but drew to himself a still larger clientage. He attended the Supreme and Federal Courts in Raleigh, and all the courts of Chatham, Moore and Harnett, with excursions in special cases to Cumberland and Randolph. He was a lawyer of the old school, disclosing to his clients the weakness as well as strength of their cases, giving advice sagaciously and ~~and~~ frankly, in attack and defense strong, skilful, and active, but never indulging in, or allowing in his adversary, angry or insulting words, making abiding impression on court and jury by clear enunciation of the law, fair and forcible presentation of the facts, with a voice peculiarly sonorous and agreeable, and an excellent grace of delivery. In his defense of criminals he had extraordinary success, his exceeding kindness of heart and sympathetic interest in the case, urging him to eloquence well-nigh irresistible. It was this sympathetic temperament that prompted him, while not blaming other lawyers, who thought differently, to decline giving aid to the State Solicitor in prosecuting prisoners charged with capital felonies.

On the fifth of June, 1856, he had the good fortune to marry a lady of Pittsboro, in every way suited to him, in talents and character, in religious proclivities, in social position, in intellect and tastes, Miss Louisa J., daughter of Dr. Isaac Hall, an eminent physician of Pittsboro, son of the more eminent lawyer and judge, John Hall of Warrenton, of the Supreme Court of this State. Their union has been most happy. They have raised eight children, all showing the outcome of their training—a never failing loving and wise management at home.

The young, hard-worked lawyer, in politics an "old-line Whig," soon won the hearts of the people of Chatham and was often solicited to be a candidate for a seat in the General Assembly. This he firmly declined, although in private, and sometimes on the stump, he used his influence to avert war and preserve the Union. When war actually came he volunteered among the first troops raised by the state, was soon made first lieutenant in his company and shortly afterwards adjutant of his regiment, the 15th Volunteers.

His experience, as a boy-captain of the Norfolk Academy Cadets, made him a valuable officer. He spent the Summer in the encampment at Yorktown, under General D. H. Hill. His military career was suddenly cut short by receiving from Judge Asa Biggs, of the Confederate States District Court, the office of Receiver under the Sequestration Acts, which position he held until the end of the war, collecting, and promptly accounting for, hundreds of thousands of dollars. About the same time that he entered the military service as a volunteer, he was elected to the Secession Convention of 1861, and although he had been an ardent Union man, he joined Badger, Graham, Gilmer, and other older members of his party, in sustaining the Ordinance of Revolution offered by Mr. Badger. He likewise voted for the ordinance offered by Chief Justice Ruffin, which proposed to dissolve the bands connecting North Carolina with the Union without claiming to repeal the act of acceptance of the federal constitution adopted in 1789. When both these propositions were negatived he joined all the other members in voting for the Burton Craige Ordinance of Secession. He deprecated the haste of the convention in adopting the Provisional and Permanent Constitution of the Confederate States and ineffectually endeavored to have them submitted to the people.

All measures for a vigorous prosecution of the war he actively sustained.

After the war he devoted himself assiduously to repairing his shattered fortune. On the death, in 1870, of the member of Congress of his district (Ex-Judge Robert B. Gilliam) he was nominated as his successor and, with a majority of over one thousand against him, was elected over Hon. Joseph W. Holden by over 350 votes. While in Congress he vigorously assailed all measures especially directed against the Southern States. He made a strong speech against the old Force Bill, which set aside safeguards of liberty under the plea of suppression of the Ku Klux Klan. This speech was circulated by his party throughout the Northern and Western States as a campaign document.

Having no taste for the manipulation of primaries he was not nominated by the ensuing District Convention, a disastrous party mistake, as the Democratic candidate was badly defeated.

The next public position held by Dr. Manning was a membership in the Constitutional Convention of 1875. Here he labored successfully to correct many crude and unsuitable provisions of the Constitution of 1868.

Having a deep love for the university, his alma mater, then in straits, he consented to be a candidate for a seat in the General Assembly of 1881, with the avowed object to aid in upbuilding it. At the request of President Battle he introduced the bill for granting the first annuity ever received from the State, $5,000. By the active labor and eloquent speeches of himself and others the bill became a law.

At the same session he was, with Hon. Wm. T. Dortch and Hon. John S. Henderson, selected by the Assembly to codify the laws, which had been changed greatly since Battle's Revisal. The result of their most intelligent labors is the Code of North Carolina, two volumes, promulgated by the General assembly of 1883, pronounced by such an excellent Judge as George V. Strong, to be the best publication ever made in the State.

About this time he was tendered a position on the Superior Court bench, but declined the offer. He likewise declined the office of Secretary of State.

In 1881, not only without his solicitation, but without his knowledge, the Board of Trustees of the university, by a unanimous vote, elected him to fill the vacancy in the professorship of law, caused by the death of ex-Judge Wm. H. Battle, in 1879. After the death of his father, President Battle had, amidst the multiplicity of other engrossing duties, kept the Law School from dying, but of course it was in a languishing condition. It was almost a leap in the dark for Dr. Manning, with a large family, to remove to Chapel Hill, with no salary promised, on the prospect of realizing a support from tuition money of his students. The venture shows his far-seeing sagacity. Beginning with a class of seven, he has had under his instruction in 1897-98, eighty-seven students.

He secured this wonderful success by hard work and faithful teaching, by intelligent sympathy with the needs of young men, and insisting on honest labor on their part. The reputation of the school for thoroughness has spread to distant states.

The hold possessed by Dr. Manning on the hearts of his students is boundless. They admire and respect his learning and skill in instruction, they reverence his piety and unbending integrity, and repay his kindly interest in their welfare with the sincerest gratitude and affection.

This sketch would be incomplete if the fact should be omitted that Dr. Manning has from boyhood been a faithful follower of Christ and not ashamed to avow it. He has been an active member of the church of his forefathers, the Protestant Episcopal, holding nearly all its offices which can be conferred on a layman, including a seat in its General Convention.

History of '98.

THE class of '98 has almost covered its allotted span in college life, and now the duty of chronicling the fourth and final chapter of its history devolves upon us. Pleasure and pain, gladness and grief have been ours, but we are forced to think that these experiences all alike—have been profitable.

To give the full measure of praise to the class for all its achievements would be too much commendation for one of its own members to bestow upon it; but, as history should be an exact record of facts, we cannot fail to record the two most noteworthy deeds—winning the inter-collegiate debate with the University of Georgia, and reviving the University Magazine.

As guileless Freshmen, to think of ever attaining the dignity of a Senior was, to us, a dream with only the remotest possibility of fulfillment, but now the reality has come, soon the goal of our undergraduate ambition will have been gained, and with a feeling of sadness almost akin to pain, we will bid adieu to Alma Mater, but the word and all the memories which cluster around it will ever be remembered. There is an element of pleasure to soften the sadness of departure; for our ambitions and aspirations lead us to hope that whatever success we have gained in college, is but an earnest of that to be acquired in after life; but "whate'er befall," as the different walks of life we pursue, we shall always love, cherish and revere the memory of "the mother who finds us so weak and makes us so strong."

History of '99.

NOW, as the college year draws to a close, it devolves upon some one to note the achievements of Ninety-nine. Our year's history is one of which we are proud ; of which we boast with a good conscience.

During our college life we have had various experiences. From our first assault upon the sophomores, while freshmen, we have developed both mentally and physically, until now, with all types of men, the politician leading, we stand ready for the onslaughts of any class.

In the social life of college we have always taken a prominent place. The Commencement of '98 will see us represented in this line to our true value.

In athletics we are supreme. All our class teams have made splendid shows. In our freshman year we started by giving the 'Varsity Base Ball Team the best first baseman that ever donned a N. C. sweater, and have been increasing, until to-day we own the manager and manager-elect of the foot ball team of '97 and '98. Neither do we stop here, for our classmate whom we sent to represent us in the diamond in our freshman year, this year has the reins of the team in his own hands,

Not only in Athletics however, is the leadership of '99 felt. In scholarship we challenge comparison with the best classes. Five of our men are members of the honor society, Alpha Theta Phi. Now that the Junior year has passed, we, like many of our predecessors, put it down as the happiest spent at our dear Alma Mater. The Historian fervently prays that this, our happy year will not witness the severance of many of our bonds of friendship, but the formation and strengthening of many more.

History of '00.

WHILE '00 did not equal '99, in numbers, as a Fresh class, yet we strove to excel them in points of scholarship and athletics. We furnish a large per cent. of the men for the "Varsity" Teams, and in class foot ball games, we held second place for two years. Returning to the "Hill," in September, we claimed the rights granted by precedent to Sophomores, and at once proceeded to take advantage of them. Freshmen can verify this statement. We showed our hospitality to the new men, by preparing for them a very sumptuous watermelon feast. They were all invited to be present, in fact urged, and when there was yet room left, we sent committees to escort them.

To show the kind interest we had in them, our help was freely given in their class election, and, on Washington's Birthday, honors were awarded to the deserving.

In our class election, the president, was elected without a dissenting vote.

The present year has been a comparatively uneventful one, but the current of our spirit is running deeper and stronger than ever. In the language of a lately-lamented statesman, we are great, "by the arduous greatness of things done."

Realizing, with many of our fellow-students, in fact nearly all of them, that this is an "age of progress," we shall continue "to progress," not in the old beaten tracks of our predecessors, but blazing out new paths to fame and glory, which the Sophs of coming years will hail with joy unspeakable, and in the frenzy of their delight will hop up and call us blessed. In the bright lexicon of '00 there has been no such word as fail. Our past is adorned with honor. We now turn to catch the gleams of hope, streaming from the future. Long live '00.

History of the Class of '01.

AS we look back upon the past nine months, the trials and vicissitudes which we have undergone come up before us, but so pleasantly colored by time, that it is with almost a feeling of regret that we realize that our Freshman days are over.

Our class, the second which has entered since the inauguration of President Alderman, prides itself on being larger than any of preceding years. And to this fact is due, we believe, the marked good will which has always been evinced for us by our natural enemies the Sophomores.

We cannot say that we have at any time been left alone to run the affairs of the university. But we have spent a most peaceful year, with the exception of a few midnight visits accompanied by their attendant woes, and the usual interesting and exciting event, class election.

In athletics we were well represented. We furnished men to the "Varsity" Base Ball and Foot Ball teams and to the Track team; besides leaving behind us a good record in the scramble for the inter-class Foot Ball championship.

Our final examination convinced us that we were not all perfect. But as a whole the class of 1901 did much better than is generally expected of Freshmen. We are exceedingly proud of the records we have left behind, and sincerely hope that in our future years at U. N. C. we may conduct ourselves creditably, as we did in our first.

History of the Law Class.

THE Law Class is absorbed in the personality of its honored preceptor, and therefore the present class needs but slight mention in this issue of the HELLENIAN. Suffice it to give some evidences that it is not behind previous classes in any respect.

We are informed that as students our work is up to any standard previously attained and is highly satisfactory.

The stay of a Law Class at the University is short, but ours has found time to distinguish itself in athletics. Cunningham, McRae and Shull were star players on the foot ball team of last fall, while Cunningham and Curtis are among the best of the second base ball team this spring. Coach Reynolds is also numbered among us.

Lawyers, proverbially, find each other congenial fellows, and the budding lawyers of '98 form an excellent example. We have formed such friendships that we look with the greatest regret upon the time to part.

History of Medical Class.

THE enrollment in the Medical Class of '97-'98 was larger than that of any previous year. The class consisted of worthy representatives of all sections of the state ; attracted to the University by the enviable reputation of the medical faculty.

Early in the term the class realized that a successful completion of the year's course would result only from immediate and constant application to the work before them. Ability, coupled with energy and perseverance, has brought its reward.

In scholarship they have surpassed the record of any previous class, and now leave behind them a standard that will be the goal of future classes.

The class entered enthusiastically into college athletics and entered the contest for the foot ball championship of college. Here again pluck and energy were rewarded by success, and they now hold the championship banner of college foot ball.

These excellent qualities displayed in the lecture room and on the athletic field during college training are encouraging indications for the future success of the class, and it is not a mere prophecy to assert that the medical class of '99 will carry these qualities with them into the more serious affairs of life, and prove an honor to their noble profession, and a great relief to suffering humanity.

History of Our Athletics.

SPASMODIC attempts to promote a lively athletic life at the university are noted from time to time in pursuing the history of the dear old institution. Like many more important things in our life to-day, we may date the first beginnings in athletics on the Hill as coming about "since the war." When Dr. Battle was devoting all the energies of his good self toward reburnishing the brightest, but then dulled, gem in North Carolina's jewelled crown, in 1876, Dr. Julian M. Baker, of Tarboro, was elected president of the first University Athletic Association. Meagre beginnings were these, a few clubs, a horizontal bar and some rings swinging in the open air. The enthusiasm then was scarcely what we see nowadays during the latter half of November. In 1885, through the kind leadership of Dr. R. H. Lewis, of Raleigh, the Alumni erected our first gymnasium, the present Commons Hall.

Almost a score of years ago base ball became known and began supplanting "bandy." Only a few cared for the game, and no attempt was made to select a representative team. No reason seemed for such a team, yet within a few years some of the more enwrapt ones essayed to down Bingham's School, then our "nighest neighbor." From the dismay of that sad defeat, however, our athletics received an impetus by which at times we have been the proud possessors of the title of "Champions of the South."

In the fall of '88 Manager DeBerniere Whitaker arranged a foot ball game to be played between the teams of the Sophomore classes of Wake Forest and the University. When the primitive game occurred during the Fair at Raleigh, Wake Forest won from Captain Bob Bingham's team by two goals to one. The fact that neither side was composed solely of Sophomores cannot be discussed here.

It is a noticeable thing that in all our first attempts in the various forms of athletics we have first tasted bitter defeat. In this, the first inter-collegiate foot ball game ever played in the state, crossbars between the goal posts were used. If we mistake not, the modern game of foot ball was first introduced into North Carolina by Dr. Crowell, a Yale man, then President of Trinity College. Captain Bragaw, who was elected captain after our first game, began getting his team ready for a game on Thanks-Day with Trinity. He did have a book of rules. Trinity won, 16 to 0. Then came to surface that which has been and must be the cause for North Carolina's success in everything. Grim determination raised money to secure Hector Cowan, Princeton's great tackle and captain, for a coach. Our whole system was revolutionized. In the first game of the newly formed State Intercollegiate Association, in Raleigh, we won from Wake Forest by 33 to 0. Trinity subsequently defeated us, 25 to 17, Captain Bragaw, a speedy half-back, having his leg broken within the first five minutes of the game. Wake Forest, however, defeated Trinity 32 to 0, a little later. Next season George Graham, an excellent kicking full back, who subsequently became captain, was badly, but not seriously hurt. Then the Trustees forbade the game.

With all these discouraging circumstances the outlook was not the brightest. But another Yale man came forward. Prof. H. H. Williams, working with George Graham, '89, Perrin Busbee, '91, Drew Patterson, '90, and other students induced the Faculty and Trustees to reconsider their decision and to allow the game. This was done and the game permitted under faculty supervision. The University Athletic Advisory Committee was inaugurated with Professor Williams as Faculty Member and Chairman. Our athletics owe Professor Williams a great debt of gratitude for his energy in reviving that necessary phase of college life. In 1891 Dr. F. P. Venable, who before had charge of the gymnasium, succeeded Professor Williams. Dr. Venable's wisdom has been of inestimable value to our athletics in passing through a stage of rapid and possibly dangerous evolution.

In the Spring of '91 we sent our timid base ball team out of the state to Richmond to meet probably the best team Virginia ever put out. Rather amusing it is to hear "Oldy," Dick Johnson and others of that team tell how "Furgy" made our only run in his stocking feet. During the Spring Mr. Hernan Graves, of Yale, visited Dr. Alexander and coached our foot ball material and established the training table. The game was not then confined to the Fall. With not a little struggle in the next session a foot ball team was gotten out. The game with Wake Forest went to our opponents on account of squabbling with one of the officials, although the score was 6 to 4 in our favor. Trinity, who won from Virginia later that season by 20 to 0, beat U. N. C. 6 to 4. In the following Spring, under the leadership of R. H. Johnston, we divided base ball games with Virginia. With the Fall of '92 came more ambition. Richmond College went down in our first foot ball game, 40-0, but the next day Virginia won from us on their grounds by 30 to 18. That was a tired crowd, but one composed of men of grit, that drove up the hill to the tolling of the college bell. Great tears stood in the eyes of giants like "Baby" Kirk, "Pete" Murphy, Snipes, Little, Pugh, Gibbs, Biggs, Barnard, Devin, Shaw and others. Captain Mike Hoke said things sotto voce. Next day those grim fellows, sore and weak, met earlier on the field. No let up in the work was allowed. The severe training told later when Trinity went down by a score of 24 to 0 before us; Auburn by 64 to 0; Vanderbilt by 24 to 0, and when the news was wired back that six weeks later we had won from the former victorious Virginia team by 26 to 0, well! Chapel Hill was "topsy turvey."

In subsequent years, with regard to victory in games, our career has been somewhat chequered. We lost in base ball and foot ball to Virginia in the Spring of '92 and Fall of '93, although "Yup" Cook, Cowan's mate, coached the team. Over-confidence in excellent foot ball material also gave a game to V. M. I. Trinity won from a crippled team by 6 to 4, and refused to play the second game. However, in the last game of foot ball in which the University has met Wake Forest was won by 44 to 0, under Barnard's captaincy.

That Spring Captain "Sly" Robertson got one of the two games we played with Virginia. In the Fall, with only two old players and comparatively poor material, a fair team was gotten out under Coach "Buckie" Irvine, with Baskerville as Captain. We lost that Fall to Lehigh and Rutgers and Virginia. We won from such Southern Colleges as Georgetown, Sewanee and Trinity. Such excellent men as Guion, Baird, Collier, Sharp, Merritt, Denson, Moore, Pugh, Stephens and Gregory were developed for the next season, however.

In the Spring we lost to Virginia, mainly on account of the disqualification of Oldham, then captain, Stephens and Robertson. This was a serious handicap, but it was time for the University to take a stand against professionalism. Whereas, all these men were bona fide students, the last named had matriculated too late in the season and the former two had been connected with Summer teams.

Princeton's great captain, Trenchard, then came to coach Captain Gregory's team. It was a season fraught with not a little disappointment. A great team it was, composed of Gregory, Merritt, Wright, Hurley, White, Baird, Collier, Whitaker, Moore, Stephens and Butler. Not a point was scored against that team until the Virginia game, which ended 6 to 0 against us. By Virginia's own accounts the game was properly ours. But the least said of it the better.

Captain Ben Stanley retrieved our losses in the Spring of '96, however, as we defeated in base ball not only Virginia but Yale, Lehigh, Lafayette and others, losing but one game during the season, and that to Princeton. The men on that team deserve every honor, Stanley, Bailey, Pearsall, Hill, Winston, Gregory, Johnson, Stephens, Whitaker, W. A. Graham, and substitute Belden.

In the Fall Captain Wright with Coach Gordon Johnson, of Princeton, labored against such severe odds as poor, light material and disgustingly small but incapacitating injuries, with a net result of a losing team.

The Spring of '97 gave us not much happiness, although Captain Stanley labored faithfully with the team. "Billy" Reynolds came to our 150-pound team in the Fall. The manner in which he and Captain Belden labored with such heavy odds is well known to us all. With such poor material indefatigable energy put out a light team which, on analysis, showed nothing but grit. Fighting against terrible odds in the weight and experience of their opponents every man died in his tracks. They were glorious heroes even in defeat.

In tennis we've done something, but not enough. We won from Virginia in '94, Bryson and Bridgers representing us in the doubles, and G. Graham in the singles. We haven't done more because Virginia hasn't given us a chance.

Golf has received some attention with us, but it has not taken the hold here as at other places.

Compulsory gymnasium attendance is having an excellent effect in developing our young manhood. Mr. Mechling's devotion to his work has done a great deal towards developing another phase of our athletics, field sports. The few improvements recently made in the gymnasium add not a little to the interest of the work in Memorial Hall.

Through the generosity of Harry S. Lake, '98, we now have the only cinder track in the State. The Preparatory Schools have a Field Day under the auspices of the Athletic Association at the University this April. This is a big forward step, for we are dependent upon the preparatory schools if we would progress. Contending with severe odds, in a comparatively small university, we have taken green material and whipped it into sufficient shape to give us a modicum of success. With the great and solid expansion of the university and many good athletes sent us from the preparatory schools, who will give the men athletic training, we have a bright future before us. Athletic prowess does not come through inane over-confidence, however, but as a result of never-tiring energy and faithful work.

A Mistaken Identity.

JACK GORDEN was well pleased with himself and all the world. As he sauntered across the college campus, his walk and general manner indicated a feeling of self-satisfaction. And he had reason to be pleased. Four years of college work was ended and a Bachelor's degree awaited him. Yet, beside the pleasure of this thought, there was another—no doubt the source of greater pleasure; for she, whom he had loved so long, would be present at his graduation. There, in his hand he held a letter—her letter—more valuable than all the diplomas, in which she told him positively that she would be present at the finals. So he was happy. True, she had promised him this months before—but appreciating the fact that she was a woman, he had never been quite positive what might happen. But now all doubt had been removed.

He found his friend Tom Carter, not so fortunate in regard to examinations, poring over pages of Blackstone as he entered his room.

"Tom, old boy, she's coming," he exclaimed, dropping into a chair opposite.

No enthusiasm was manifest at the announcement of this important event—in fact a look of slight annoyance was written upon the face of his friend, as he listlessly asked:

"Is she?"

"Yes, she will see me receive my diploma. How grand to have her present at my graduation! Congratulate me."

The other smiled at the enthusiasm of his friend. Jack had appeared in a new role. The sudden zeal—this show of spirit, in one usually so devoid of energy, made him wonder if his club-mate was really taking on a new lease—in these latter days of college life. So he merely smiled as he laid aside his book.

Tom’s face suddenly changed at these words.

“Whom did you say?” he quickly asked.

“Oh, no doubt you are ready to question that statement,” came the bantering reply. “Of course you know some one, you think prettier—but you are wrong, my boy, just wait till you see her.”

“But what did you say was her name?”

“Why, Miss Ellsworth, of course. Of whom do you suppose I have been speaking for the past ten minutes?”

“Miss Ellsworth of S—?”

“Yes. Do you know her?”

“Y--yes, I had the pleasure of meeting her once.”

“You know her! Why did you not tell me before?”

“I don’t see why I should have done so,” replied Tom. “I did not know that you knew the lady.”

“Know her! why, of course I know her. We are the best of friends. I’ve known her for years. Know her?” he repeated, sitting erect in his chair. “Why, she is the sweetest, dearest girl in the state. She is the finest woman that ever lived. Do I know her? Why—I’ll tell you a secret—we’re engaged!”

“The devil you are!”

“Yes,—why—why—what’s the matter?”

“Oh, nothing,” came the reply, and Tom nervously knocked the ashes from his pipe and began to refill it from his tobacco pouch.

Jack eyed him curiously, as he arose from his chair and walked over to the window.

“I wonder what’s the trouble with him,” he muttered, as he settled himself in his chair and began to re-read her letter for the fourth time.

Meanwhile Tom was leaning against the window-sill, looking out across the campus, where scores of students could be seen strolling along the gravelled walks, which, in the dazzling sunlight, looked like bits of white ribbon stretched across the green campus. But he did not notice these things. Other thoughts filled his brain. He was again at a summer resort where, the previous season, he had met a Miss Ellsworth. He remembered well their walks, their drives, their sails together. He remembered how he had loved her, how she had pretended to love him, but had at last had promised him a sister's affection for all he had given. They had not met since that day. He had returned to college and had tried in vain to efface from his mind all memory of her, yet he could not forget her.

And now she was coming to the finals, no doubt, he thought, to add to his discomfiture.

"Engaged to him," he muttered, turning from the window and glaring at his friend—who, all unconscious, was engaged in the most delightful occupation of reading her letter. "Coming to see him graduate, and I must stay and see them together. Jilted in the Summer and now ignored—that's what I get for my love—and I did love her—I love her yet—and—blame it—she knows it. Coming to see him—and there he is, reading her letter—I hate her, I hate them both—myself too—damn it!" And with this explosion he left the room, banging the door behind him.

"What in the thunder is up now, I wonder!" said Jack, looking around—but Tom was gone.

The days intervening before the finals passed quickly. They were full of unrest for Tom Carter. A momentary relief at the thought that, perhaps, this Miss Ellsworth was some other than the one he knew, was quickly dispelled by the sight of a photograph in Jack's possession. It was she, and she was coming. Then he had thought of cancelling his engagements and going home. But there was still another thought—of seeing her again. Could he hope? Had he not been hasty before? These were the questions he asked himself. Anyway he would wait. And so Commencement found him still at college.

It was the evening of the final ball. The classical air that usually seemed to hang over the old university had given place to one of pleasure. The shrine of Minerva had been deserted for the temple of Venus, for to-night the ball room was the centre of attraction. There all was gaiety and life. The large hall, bedecked with college colors, adorned with potted plants, hiding here and there a cozy nook, the bright lights, beautiful women and handsome men, all presented a scene worthy of a fairy court.

Everyone seemed happy. Yet amid the throng, there was one, whose exterior calmness gave no intimation of the struggle within. To him the past few days were as a dream. He had beheld the woman he loved constantly in company with another, to whom she was engaged. He was ignored and forgotten. She had even professed never to have known him. To her he was an utter stranger. They had met face to face on the first day of the finals, but there was no look of recognition on her part. Later, upon a formal introduction, she assumed the same air of apparent ignorance of their former friendship, but received him cordially as Jack's dearest friend. Tom had made no mention of their former acquaintance; he determined to act the part as well as she. To him she was a heartless woman taunting him with these pretensions, and he would under no circumstances lower the barrier, or make the first advance. Love, anger and jealousy filled his soul. He could not but admire the self-possession of the woman, though he scorned the role she was playing.

He had always thought her beautiful, but to-night she seemed to him prettier than ever. His thoughts and eyes were centered upon her. While seemingly delighted and all engrossed in the conversation with his partner, he was really watching Miss Ellsworth as she leaned upon the arm of Jack Gordon, smiling up into his face, the picture of happiness. And in his heart he cursed them both and his own hard luck. And the next was their dance. Jack had requested it and there was no refusal. Though he wished to shun her society, his position as Jack's friend prevented it.

Her cordiality toward him, when considered in the light of their former acquaintance, seemed like mockery. Yet when with her, a feeling of infinite pleasure possessed him, the old passion would return and the touch of her hand would send a thrill through his frame. Then how he loved her! These were his thoughts as, to the music of a quick two-step, they mingled in the maze of dancers.

A few minutes later found them in a quiet nook. He had asked to sit out the latter part of their dance. Of course she was fatigued, the hall was so warm, and how delightful would be the cool night air, and so they had found this seat. She chatted gaily about the dance, the college, the campus, Jack, everything it seemed to Tom, but one subject—the previous Summer at the sea shore. That she did not mention.

But he would be treated in no such manner. He determined to put a stop to this farce at once. The music had ceased, and instead there arose the steady hum of many voices. He knew Jack would soon be looking for them, so he must not delay.

"Miss Ellsworth—Maud," he said, bending toward her and speaking rapidly. "Why continue this farce longer? Why pretend that you have forgotten our acquaintance of the past Summer. Your acting is superb, I must grant, but really I see nothing that you could gain by such a course. Remember—"

But she heard no more. A man had emerged through the foliage, and stood before them. With a little scream, she darted from her seat and fell into his arms.

"Oh, Jack," she cried, nestling close to him, as if in terror, "he thinks I am my twin sister, Maud."

CHAPTER I.—TWO AUTUMN SAWS.

"His stories are sky-scrapers."—Faison.

MABEL MASHEARTER said she'd never do it. Charlie Singletree might kill all the bull-bats his funny nature dictated, but she said she wasn't going to cook them. Mabel sometimes did fancy work, but she didn't fancy work of the culinary kind. There was thus an antinomy that could be solved only by death.

Charlie Singletree was sentimental, but he loved bull-bats better than he loved his own life. By natural law, therefore, the next time he climbed the cornfield fence, his friend, Will Quicktrigger, killed him dead.

Nature had avenged herself—the antinomy was solved.

There was now nothing to do but for Will to get soft on Mabel, which he did out at dear Charlie's grave on pretty moonlights, when the leaves on the trees were falling off, and things like that.

All went well until Will said Mabel had eyes like "Mother Eve's." He had never been to Sunday-school and did not know that Eve was cross-eyed. But Mabel did know, so she hauled off and kicked him whither, whither, whither. * * * * *

CHAPTER II.—THE JAY BIRD'S BREAST.

"He should use his father's soap."—Parson.

An old man was seated in front of his cabin. Our readers have sense enough, of course, to know that it is our old friend, Will Quicktrigger. When Mabel kicked him he landed up on top of the beautiful Blue Ridge, with a brogue unknown among the tongues of Babel, and his hair turned white in a single night, although he wore a wig.

Trip Eighty-Seven.

‘TIS 2.30 P. M. and a vast concourse of humanity is surging slowly towards the west gate of the compus. There, in all his majesty, stands a short, stocky figure, apparelled in a cherubic smile, a pair of corduroy pants, a geological hammer and other appurtenances appended.

As the melancholy figures approach, the cherubic smile broadens into a “grin,” which, however, fails to dispel the sombre expressions on the countenances of the arriving many. Monosyllabic greetings are exchanged and little groups of individuals assort themselves over the verdure and engage in “mumble-peg” with a recklessness that betokens despair.

But, one asks, what has caused this gathering? Why this restless waiting? The hour and place seem not to argue any important procedure, or the young faces any deep-laid scheme to affect the lives or fortunes of the citizens of the commonwealth. Ah! the conjecture is well founded. This diabolical conglomeration is Prof. Cobb’s class in Geology 2 (not Second Geology) and its purpose is to take “Trip Eighty-seven.”

But finally, a shout goes up from the group and low imprecations and curses deep fill the air. The “Acidulator” is seen approaching with dignified mien. Upon the arrival of this gentleman, the vast aggregation slowly arises, and, led by the “Acidulator” and Prof. Cobb, wend their way to the scene of action, passing the residence of that most honored university potentate, Eugene Lewis Harris, Ph. B., Registrar and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Court of Lord Alderman. The distinguished gentleman is resting (as is habitual with him), leaning over the gate, as the “Cobbites” pass by. One of them, maddened to desperation at the fast pace set by the Professor, and seeing a mode by which he can have such a procedure discountenanced, walks reverently to the potentate, and asks in a voice tremulous with emotion,—“Oh! Mr. Harris, do you think it is right that we should be subjected to this ? ” A look of despair crosses the Platonic face of the great man, and then it lights up again, as he replies gravely, “ God know best, my young friend.” Upon hearing these words, the “ Cobbite’s ” heart is cheered, and he sprints for several hundred yards, when he gets in sight of the army of Cobbs as it traverses a country road leading, (to use the words of a prominent U. N. C. “ literateur.”) “ Whither ! Whither ! Whither ! ”

In the course of an half-hour, by dint of perseverance, the belated one reaches the “ trampers.”

The road is laden with dust, and the multitudinous foot-falls cause it to rise, filling the throats and blinding the eyes of “ les misérables.” Murmurs of discontent and dark hints of desertion pass along the line. In another moment the storm of long-suffering indignation will break. But he of the corduroy pants is equal to the emergency. He spies a rock. A look of exultation o’erspreads his face. He springs up the bank of the road and striking the rock with the hammer, cries in a triumphant tone : “ granitic mass ! ” Standing upon his elevated position, with a blush o’erspreading his chubby face, the professor receives the plaudits of the crowd. Ah ! ’tis a scene for a master painter.

One youth, a neophyte in geology, as is shown, who has lingered behind, now arrives on the scene and inquires the course of the excitement. With ill-concealed scorn at such a display of ignorance, one who “ has been there before ” replies, “ Trip Eighty-seven is completed.”

The North Carolina Girl.

I lay one night on a mossy bank
By a river's purling stream,
And my pensive soul seemed to float away,
Upon the crest of the fading day,
In a happy, thoughtless dream.

A group of maidens, in fairest attire,
Seemed to float on the lambent air,
Like a throng of elves and spirits, whirled
From the confines of a fairy world,
Till the vision was passing fair.

Of radiant beauty, these dreamland elves
In the moonbeams' misty light;
And nature's endowment in form and face
Was enhanced by art and womanly grace
And colors warm and bright.

As they circle about me, a mystic group,
On a moonbeam's silvery crest,
In rhythmic motion, with hand in hand,
I noticed that one of the fairy band
Was fairer than all the rest.

Then they paused before my wondering eyes,
As the clouds beneath them roll,
And their leader, the fairest, fairy queen,
O'erspread with the vision's misty sheen,
Seemed to speak to my dreamy soul:

"We are types of American womanhood,
Who before thee dance and whirl;
The solace of man's mortality,
And I, the fairest of all you see,
Am the North Carolina girl."
